The focus this week is on degrees in the arts - film, fashion, arts, design. The centerpoint of so many discussions about study after high school is on the STEM subjects, the sciences, technology, medicine, engineering. It is crucial for humanity that the arts not be forgotten. So, below there is a selection, really just a smattering, of study programs available in the arts.

New York Film Academy has alternative study solutions rather than pursuit of a Bachelor's degree in Fine Arts; Loughborough University known for its technology and sports degrees also has a world class design school; Arizona State University has the renowned Herberger Institute for Design and the Arts; University of South Wales has a unique course of study in TV and Film Set Design; Griffith University, Australia has a well developed visual arts program that gives students access directly to paying clients. Take some time to research these innovative programs.
