

VIDEO

of the week

Let's talk medicine! There is an interesting statistic that it is harder to get in to medicine in South Africa than it is to get in to Harvard. Studying medicine is an expensive venture no matter the country. It's a long process and hard work; but when you have your medical degree, it is rewarding.

The purpose of this video of the week is to highlight a couple of top-shelf medical schools where English is the medium of teaching, and they are accessible for South African students.

One is St George's University in Grenada, which places more residents in the US, than any other US medical school AND you get to live on an island in the Caribbean. The other is the University of Pecs in Hungary, where you can study in a very hands-on clinical program and live in a 2000 year-old city in Europe.

Click title to watch

St. George's
University
THINK BEYOND
Grenada, West Indies

Overview SGU

University Of Pecs Med School

St. George's
University
THINK BEYOND
Grenada, West Indies

The Truth About

Student