The participation in sports is central in many South African high schools. Whether competing for “first” team or enjoying the camaraderie of friends in a less competitive team, there is no denying that many South African learners love their sport. For a country of its size, South Africa has produced many world class athletes across many sports. Pursuing your sport in university while earning a university degree can take many forms. Universities world over have recreational or club sports leagues for their students. Then, there are the serious sports people who would like to have their excellence in sport pay for at least a portion of their university fees. This can range from a 15% discount to a full scholarship. There are many factors that affect this range of financial assistance. As a general rule, the universities in the USA have the most amount of money in their “scholarship purses.” Financial assistance in the form of sports scholarships is less significant in the UK and Australia, but does exist, primarily as services and benefits.
