Critical to the success of graduates today is an understanding of the interconnectedness of our world. This doesn't only hold true with technology and the "nuts and bolts" of how connectivity works. Solving problems in a global marketplace relies on the understanding of how concepts in business, environment, law, politics, arts influence each other. The Bachelor's in Global Studies program at Maastricht University in the Netherlands is a unique and innovative program to explore these very connections across six different faculties at the university. Not only that, Maastricht employs a unique Problem Based Learning (PBL) method of teaching that further optimizes the Global Studies program.

Maastricht is an ancient Dutch city with a vibrant arts culture and a large population of international university students. It is nestled in the southeast of Holland between the borders of Belgium and Germany. What better place for a Global Studies degree!
